

Press Release

16. April 2026

Patricia Uhlig Named New Head of Communications at Lupus alpha

Frankfurt-based asset manager Lupus alpha is expanding its communications team: At the beginning of April, Patricia Uhlig took over as head of the Communications department and will also serve as the company's press spokesperson in this role. She succeeds Pia Kater, who left Lupus alpha at the end of 2025 after 17 years with the firm.

Before joining Lupus alpha, Patricia Uhlig worked for four years in corporate communications at DekaBank, most recently as deputy head of the press office. A business administration graduate (BA) and certified journalist, she began her career in business and financial journalism. From 2005 to 2022, she worked at the Thomson Reuters news agency in Frankfurt, where she was primarily responsible for banking coverage.

“We are very pleased to have recruited Patricia Uhlig for Lupus alpha,” says Ralf Lochmüller, founding partner and CEO of Lupus alpha. “As an experienced communications specialist with a background in financial journalism, she is ideally qualified to support Lupus alpha on its continued growth trajectory.”

About Lupus alpha: As an owner-managed, independent asset management firm, Lupus alpha has been synonymous with innovative, specialized investment solutions for 25 years. Lupus alpha is a pioneer in European small- and mid-cap investing in Germany and is one of the leading providers of volatility and capital preservation strategies, as well as collateralized loan obligations (CLOs). The specialized product range is rounded out by global convertible bond strategies and risk overlay solutions for institutional portfolios. The company manages €15 billion in assets for institutional and wholesale investors. For more information, visit www.lupusalphacom.